The last two decades of the twentieth century witnessed the rise of a novel idea the belief that an explicit confrontation with past injustices forms an essential component of commitment to constitutional democracy and the rule of law. This has had a widespread impact in transitional contexts across regions. It has also assumed a variety of political and cultural forms. The Memory Politics and Transitional Justice series publishes innovative new scholarship that confronts critical questions at the intersection of memory politics and transitional justice. The editors welcome submissions from a variety of disciplines, including political science and political theory, law, sociology, and cultural studies.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am grateful to many institutions and people for support in developing this book, although many would likely not agree completely with the claims made here. First thanks go to Palgrave editors and staff, especially Anca Pusca and Anne Schult, as well as three anonymous reviewers whose astute insights and graciously stated criticisms made this publication so many times better than it would have been. I also thank the Archives of the City of Płock for permission to cite the testimony of Czesława Stawiska.

The idea for this book came from one of the first Silberman Seminars held at the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, led by Dr. Antony Polonsky. I am indebted to him for his unerring eye for historical truth, his commitment to Poland and Polish Jewry, and his generosity toward younger scholars. Loyola University Maryland provided sabbatical time and summer research grants to enable me to travel to Poland annually, allowing me to develop a careful understanding of that country's social and political scene. I also thank the Library of Congress's European Reading Room librarians and staff.

Many individuals were important in helping this book come to fruition, although they may not agree with its methods or findings. The generosity and expertise of Brian Porter-Szucs, Robert Blobaum, Keeley Stauter-Halsted, Padraic Kenney, and Krzysztof Jasiewicz have deepened my understanding and helped this political scientist become somewhat of a historian over the years, although none of them bears any responsibility for this book's weaknesses. Brian Porter-Szucs has been a one-of-a-kind interlocutor, friend, translator, critic, and beer-sampling companion throughout most of my time encountering Poland's complexities and gifts. At crucial points, Jill Ehnenn, Peggy O'Neill, Celia Paris, Ron Tanner, Jill Eicher, Donata Blobaum, Ehren Fordyce, Susan Pearce, Norman Sedgley, Brian Norman, and Carsten Vala helped work through obstacles. In Poland, I received invaluable support from Inez Pietrzak, Paweł Kazaniecki, Marc Weinstein, Marta Kubiszyn, Tomasz Pietrasiewicz, Krzysztof Czyżewski, and Małgorzata Czyżewska. In Baltimore, my colleagues at Loyola created a positive environment for international travel and research, especially David Haddad, who supported a year-long sabbatical, John Hollwitz, Moira Lynch, Celia Paris, Jesse Merriam, Douglas Harris, Kevin Hula, Michael Franz, Diana Schaub, Carsten Vala, Michelle Gawerc, Ilona McGuiness, William Kitchin, Donald Wolfe, Amanda Thomas, and Mary Kate Schneider. I also thank Astrid Holc, Ria Holc, Marc Klodzinski, Justin Klodzinski, Jamie Klodzinski, April Dodge, Rebecca Barck, Tracee Ford, Everette Renee Harvey Thompson, Andrea Giampetro-Meyer, David Barnet, Robin Kolodny, Judy Katz, Dick Katz, LaToya Gassaway, Kathe Curran, Jay Hilgartner, Debi Brocht, Luu Pham, Christina Pham-Linhoff, Phyllis Krivak, Chauna Brocht, Kris Misage, Mary Semela, Ailish Hopper, Cherie Marvel, Gry Gambert, Deborah Lank, Marianne Ward-Perdoza, Angela Leonard, Jill Whitehead, Chris Stadler, Jacob Rice, and Cindy Hill for words and actions that enabled me to carry out this research and writing. For life-sustaining friendship, empathy and generosity I thank Paula Davis, Donella Woods, and Bianca Ingram. Lisa Oberbroeckling consistently provided encouragement and insight. For her expertise, skepticism, humor, and friendship I again thank Marta Kubiszyn. This book simply could not have been written without Julia Jordan-Zachery. Her constancy, commitment to the life of the mind, integrity, and activism is an academic ideal to which I aspire.
