The Sheffield Political Economy Research Institute (SPERI) is an innovation in higher education research and outreach. It brings together leading international researchers in the social sciences, policy makers, journalists and opinion formers to reassess and develop proposals in response to the political and economic issues posed by the current combination of financial crisis, shifting economic power and environmental threat. Building a Sustainable Political Economy: SPERI Research & Policy will serve as a key outlet for SPERI's published work. Each title will summarise and disseminate to an academic and postgraduate student audience, as well as directly to policy-makers and journalists, key policy-oriented research findings designed to further the development of a more sustainable future for the national, regional and world economy following the global financial crisis. It takes a holistic and interdisciplinary view of political economy in which the local, national, regional and global interact at all times and in complex ways. The SPERI research agenda, and hence the focus of the series, seeks to explore the core economic and political questions that require us to develop a new sustainable model of political economy at all times and in complex ways.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

We would like to acknowledge the funding we have enjoyed from the UK Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) over the past recent years (as award numbers RES000222688, ES/K006398/1 and ES/P002862/1) which has enabled us to explore the concept of a legacy with regards to the UK governments led by Margaret Thatcher from 1979 until 1990, and which has led to this publication. Our thinking has been stimulated and refined by the close working relationships we have enjoyed with Will Jennings (Southampton University) and Maria Grasso (Sheffield University), and we thank them both for their time and insights. Our colleagues at the universities we have worked at whilst pursuing this intellectual project (namely, Sheffield University, Sciences Po and Derby University) have also been supportive of our endeavours and we thank them all.

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Stephen Farrall is Research Chair in Criminology in the Department of Criminology in the College of Business, Law and the Social Sciences at the University of Derby. He has held posts at the Universities of Oxford, Keele and Sheffield. In addition to his work on the long-term impacts of Thatcherism on UK society and crime, he is well known for his work on why people stop offending and on the fear of crime and the causes of this.

Colin Hay is Professor of Political Science (Professeur des Universités) in the Centre d'études européennes and Director of Doctoral School in Political Science at Sciences Po, Paris. He is Professor of Political Analysis in the Department of Politics at the University of Sheffield, UK, and founding co-Director of the Sheffield Political Economy Research Institute (SPERI). He has held visiting positions at Oxford, ANU, Harvard and MIT. He is the author of a number of books including, most recently, Dictionnaire d'économie politique (2019, with Andy Smith), (with D. Bailey, eds.) Diverging Capitalisms. Basingstoke: Palgrave Macmillan 2019, The Coming Crisis (Palgrave, 2018, with Tom Hunt), Anti-Politics, Depoliticisation and Governance (2017, with Paul Fawcett et al.), Civic Capitalism (2015, with Anthony Payne) and The Legacy of Thatcherism (2014, with Stephen Farrall). He is perhaps best known for his prize-winning book Why We Hate Politics (2007) and for Political Analysis (Palgrave Macmillan, 2002). He is editor of the journals New Political Economy, Comparative European Politics and British Politics and president of the European University Institute's Research Council. He was chair of the UK Research Excellence Framework Sub-Panel for Politics and International Studies and is a fellow of the UK Academy of Social Sciences.

Emily Gray is Senior Lecturer in Criminology at the University of Derby. She has held research posts at the Universities of Edinburgh, Oxford, Keele and Sheffield. Her work has focused on the intersection of crime, social policy and politics and testing the methodologies with which to assess these long-term patterns. Her broader research topics also include persistent offending and fear of crime. She is an academic advisor to the Youth Justice Board and Ministry of Justice.
