

palgrave▶pivot

Art-Based Social Enterprise, Young Creatives and the Forces of Marginalisation

Grace McQuilten
Amy Spiers
Kim Humphery
Peter Kelly

palgrave
macmillan

Art-Based Social Enterprise, Young Creatives and the Forces of Marginalisation

Grace McQuilten · Amy Spiers ·
Kim Humphery · Peter Kelly

Art-Based Social Enterprise, Young
Creatives and the Forces of Marginalisation

palgrave
macmillan

Grace McQuilten
School of Art
RMIT University
Melbourne, VIC, Australia

Amy Spiers
School of Art
RMIT University
Melbourne, VIC, Australia

Kim Humphery
School of Global, Urban & Social Studies
RMIT University
Melbourne, VIC, Australia

Peter Kelly
School of Education
Deakin University
Bundoora, VIC, Australia

ISBN 978-3-031-10924-9      ISBN 978-3-031-10925-6 (eBook)
<https://doi.org/10.1007/978-3-031-10925-6>

© The Author(s), under exclusive license to Springer Nature Switzerland AG 2022

This work is subject to copyright. All rights are solely and exclusively licensed by the Publisher, whether the whole or part of the material is concerned, specifically the rights of translation, reprinting, reuse of illustrations, recitation, broadcasting, reproduction on microfilms or in any other physical way, and transmission or information storage and retrieval, electronic adaptation, computer software, or by similar or dissimilar methodology now known or hereafter developed.

The use of general descriptive names, registered names, trademarks, service marks, etc. in this publication does not imply, even in the absence of a specific statement, that such names are exempt from the relevant protective laws and regulations and therefore free for general use.

The publisher, the authors, and the editors are safe to assume that the advice and information in this book are believed to be true and accurate at the date of publication. Neither the publisher nor the authors or the editors give a warranty, expressed or implied, with respect to the material contained herein or for any errors or omissions that may have been made. The publisher remains neutral with regard to jurisdictional claims in published maps and institutional affiliations.

Cover illustration: © John Rawsterne/patternhead.com

This Palgrave Macmillan imprint is published by the registered company Springer Nature Switzerland AG

The registered company address is: Gewerbestrasse 11, 6330 Cham, Switzerland

Acknowledgements

We would firstly like to acknowledge the significant intellectual contribution of Professor Deborah Warr, who as part of our research team always pushed us to look closer, to think more carefully, to attend to issues of equity and access at every corner, and perhaps most importantly, to keep going back to the voices of young creatives. Dr. Perri Campbell was a key member of our team from 2017 to 2018, and her insights on youth cultures and creativity were invaluable. We would also like to thank Chiara Grassia, our talented Ph.D. candidate whose work on understanding the role of ‘safe spaces’ in supporting young creatives to imagine their futures is making a great contribution to the fields of education and community arts development. We extend our appreciation to our generous colleagues across the Schools of Art, Education and Global & Urban Social Studies at RMIT University for their critical feedback, collegiality and support—with a special shout out to Dr. Ruth DeSouza for pointing us back towards Eve Tuck’s humanising approach to research with young people. We would also like to take the opportunity to acknowledge the late Professor Andy Furlong (the University of Glasgow), who prior to his premature death in January 2017 had played an important role in developing some of the ideas that framed our original project proposal, and who was to be a Partner Investigator on the project. Andy's profile, track record and influence in sociologies of youth are profound. But, importantly, Andy's intellect, humour, collegiality and willingness to mentor and collaborate continue to be sorely missed.

Above all, we would like to acknowledge and thank the generous contributions of artists, staff and students across the twelve art-based social enterprises that we surveyed as part of our study, and in particular at our three case study organisations Youthworx, The Social Studio and Outer Urban Projects. At Youthworx, Jon Staley, Keith Waters, David Mackenzie and Nicola Innes provided enormous insights into the importance of providing engaging training for young creatives disengaged from mainstream schooling. At The Social Studio, our research was embraced by Dewi Cooke, Cate Coleman, Eugenia Flynn and Aleksandra Nedjelkovic, who expanded our thinking about the complexities, and possibilities, of the ASE model. And at Outer Urban Projects, Kate Gillick, David Ralph and Irene Vela welcomed us into the 'OUP family' and have inspired a range of critical approaches that have impacted on the findings in the book. We have immensely enjoyed collaborating with these colleagues and young creatives in co-producing exhibitions and events. We further acknowledge that author Grace McQuilten is co-founder and former CEO (2009–2014) of The Social Studio.

This book has emerged from a five-year, qualitative research project titled 'Art Based Social Enterprises and Marginalised Young People's Transitions', led by Professor Peter Kelly, Dr. Grace McQuilten, Associate Professor Kim Humphery and Professor Deb Warr, across two Australian Universities including RMIT University (Melbourne) and Charles Sturt University (Wagga). The research was supported fully by the Australian Government through the Australian Research Council's Discovery Projects funding scheme (project DP170100547). The views expressed herein are those of the authors and are not necessarily those of the Australian Government or Australian Research Council. Parts of Chapter 5, 'The Social Studio: Hope and Pragmatic Ambition', have been adapted from a previous journal article “‘Art is different’: Material practice, learning and co-making at The Social Studio’, published in the Journal of Arts and Communities (10[2], pp. 19–33) by Intellect Publishers. Reproduced with permission of The Licensor through PLSclear.

Contents

1	Introduction: Artistic Practice and Social Outcomes in a Market-Driven Landscape	1
2	Precarious Youth and Digital Futures	27
3	The Youthworx Model: Disengaged Young People and Creative Digital Training	41
4	Fashioning a Future: Material Practice, Creativity and Sustainable Economies	65
5	The Social Studio: Hope and Pragmatic Ambition	81
6	Creative Practice, Cultural Citizenship and the Urban Fringe	107
7	Outer Urban Projects: Community Building Versus Mainstreaming	121
8	Conclusion	145
	Index	157

About the Authors

Dr. Grace McQuilten is an art historian, curator and writer and Associate Professor in the School of Art at RMIT University. She was born and grew up on Dja Dja Warrung country and now lives and works on the lands of the Wurundjeri peoples of the Eastern Kulin nations. She completed her Ph.D. in art history at the University of Melbourne in 2008. She is the author of Art as Enterprise: Social & Economic Engagement in Contemporary Art (co-authored with Dr. Anthony White, IB Tauris, 2016) and Art in Consumer Culture (Ashgate Publishing, 2011) and has published widely on contemporary art and design. Alongside her academic career, she has worked extensively in social enterprise, community development, public art and curatorship, and is deeply committed to the relationship between artistic practice and social change.

Dr. Amy Spiers is an artist and researcher living on the unceded lands of the Kulin nation in so-called Melbourne, Australia. She completed a Master of Fine Art in 2011 and a Ph.D. in 2018 at the Victorian College of the Arts. She has presented socially-engaged art projects across Australia and internationally, including at Monash University Museum of Art (Melbourne), MONA FOMA festival (Hobart) and the 2015 Vienna Biennale. She has published academic and arts writing widely and most recently edited Let's Go Outside: Art in Public (co-edited with Charlotte Day and Callum Morton, Monash University Publishing, 2022). She is currently a Vice Chancellor Postdoctoral Research Fellow at RMIT School of Art, as well as co-editing a book with Genevieve Grieves on Indigenous settler relations in Australian contemporary art and memorial practices (Springer, forthcoming 2022).

Kim Humphery is Associate Professor in sociology and social theory at RMIT University and holds degrees from the universities of Melbourne and Cambridge in politics, social theory and history. She lives and works on the lands of the Wurundjeri peoples of the Kulin nations. Since the mid-1990s, she has developed a national profile for her socio-cultural work in Indigenous health and cross-cultural research ethics. She has also researched and written on community arts and wellbeing. Internationally, however, she is best known for her work in the history and sociology of consumption and has published extensively on ethical consumption and enterprise. Most recently, she has turned to researching theories of trans and gender diversity. Her major publications include: Shelf Life: Supermarkets and The Changing Cultures of Consumption (CUP 1998 & 2011) and Excess: Anti-Consumerism in the West (Polity 2010).

Peter Kelly is a Professor of Education in the School of Education at Deakin University. Peter's current research interests include a critical engagement with young people, their wellbeing, resilience and enterprise, and the challenges associated with the emergence of the Anthropocene. In the context of the COVID-19 pandemic, these interests are framing the development of a research agenda titled: COVID-19 and Young People's Well-being, Education, Training and Employment Pathways: Scenarios for Young People's Sustainable Futures. Peter's previous books include: Social Justice in Times of Crisis and Hope: Young People, Wellbeing and the Politics of Education, Re-thinking Young People's Marginalisation: Beyond Neo-Liberal Futures?, Young People and the Politics of Outrage and Hope, A Critical Youth Studies for the 21st Century; The Self as Enterprise: Foucault and the Spirit of 21st Century Capitalism, and Working in Jamie's Kitchen: Salvation, Passion and Young Workers.

List of Figures

Fig. 1.1	A still from Emerging (2020), a video made by students of Youthworx, a media production social enterprise based in Melbourne (Image courtesy of the artists and Youthworx)	4
Fig. 1.2	Emerging fashion designer, Nancy Oziya, at work at The Social Studio, a fashion-based social enterprise in Melbourne (Photograph: Teva Cosic)	14
Fig. 1.3	A still from Silence, Dance, Poetry (2020), a video by Outer Urban Projects performing artist Damian Seddon (Image courtesy of the artist and Outer Urban Projects)	20
Fig. 3.1	Youthworx video installation, Emerging (2020), installed at Bus Projects, Collingwood (Photograph: Lucy Foster)	44
Fig. 3.2	Youthworx video installation, Emerging (2020), installed at Bus Projects, Collingwood (Photograph: Lucy Foster)	57
Fig. 3.3	A ‘making-of’ scene from Emerging (2020) (Image courtesy of the artists and Youthworx)	57
Fig. 5.1	Asia Hassan, Take It Off , 2019. Asiyam Label (Image courtesy of Asiyam)	83

Fig. 5.2	Mhubo Sulieman leads a weaving workshop at The Social Studio in August 2019 (Photograph Teva Cosic)	92
Fig. 5.3	Mhubo Sulieman instructs one of the researchers and a student of The Social Studio how to do finger weaving in August 2019 (Photograph Teva Cosic)	93
Fig. 5.4	Twich Women's Sewing Collective founder Abuk Bol (far right) with co-founders (left to right) Nyachol John, Ayen Bol and Akech Majok (Image courtesy of Twich Women's Sewing Collective)	97
Fig. 7.1	A promotional image for Hume Studios (Image courtesy of Outer Urban Projects)	124
Fig. 7.2	Artist Ruci Kaisila performing at Hume Studios (Image courtesy of Outer Urban Projects)	132
Fig. 7.3	Image developed in the OUP's organisational mapping workshop facilitated by the research team, August 2018	141

1

Introduction: Artistic Practice and Social Outcomes in a Market-Driven Landscape

Abstract This chapter explores the context in which art-based social enterprises (ASEs) are engaging young creatives in education and training and supporting their pathways to the creative industries. In doing so, it also sets the terms for how this book aims to address the complex intersecting issues of marginality and entrepreneurship, particularly in relation to young creatives from socially, economically and culturally diverse backgrounds. This chapter examines several key issues, including (1) the social turn in contemporary art, in which artistic practices are engaged with the lives of people and communities and with a spirit of collectivism aimed at addressing a range of issues from social exclusion to climate change; (2) rapid growth in social enterprise models across a range of sectors, including the creative industries that has been spurred, in part, by increasing economic pragmatism in the state funding and delivery of welfare, cultural and community services; and (3) significant fourth industrial revolution disruptions and transformations in the nature of work, a shift that has disproportionately affected young people globally in terms of their access to employment and education opportunities.

Keywords Art · Social enterprise · Forces of marginalisation · Creative industries · Young creatives · Employment · Education and training

This book explores the opportunities and challenges faced by art-based social enterprises (ASEs) in engaging young people in education and training and supporting their pathways to employment.<sup>1</sup> It also explores the dynamics and implications of ‘enterprising’ artistic practice for these and other social purposes. This study is thus set against the backdrop of what is termed the social turn in contemporary art, in which mainstream artistic practices have become more engaged with the lives of people and communities and with a spirit of collectivism aimed at addressing a range of issues from social exclusion to climate change. This social turn is not, in itself, new—and draws upon histories and traditions of collectivism in arts and cultural practices across the globe and historically. What is new is the ways in which these more social and collective practices have infiltrated the more hierarchical and market-driven aspects of the contemporary art world. In addition, the study is set against the backdrop of rapid growth in social enterprise models across a range of sectors, including the creative industries. This is a growth spurred, in part, by increasing economic pragmatism in the state funding and delivery of welfare, cultural and community services. Finally, this study has taken place in the context of significant ‘fourth industrial revolution’ disruptions and transformations in the nature of work, a shift that has disproportionately affected young people globally in terms of their access to employment and education opportunities (Neufeind et al., 2018; Panth & Maclean, 2020).

Living with uncertain work futures and amid a climate of work precarity has become increasingly normal for young people in OECD countries in the wake of the 2008–2009 global financial crisis (GFC) (BSL, 2014, Kelly et al., 2015, Standing, 2011). A decade later, the

---

<sup>1</sup> In using the term ‘art-based social enterprise’, we are advocating for a broad understanding of art that includes diverse media and practices and one that appeals to a cross-section of communities. We recognise the different uses of the terms ‘art-based’ and ‘arts-based’ in relation to creative research methods and have elected to use the term ‘art-based’ with a view to plurality in how we understand ‘art.’

unfolding impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic have heightened this atmosphere (and reality) of uncertainty: lockdowns, border closures and social services in crisis have all impacted significantly on opportunities for work generally, and the security of work more specifically. These pandemic impacts have been particularly felt in the creative and cultural industries, fields already subject to precarity in the form of contract work, freelancing and widespread self-employment (Throsby & Petetskaya, 2017; UNESCO, 2021b). The impact of lockdowns in the arts and creative industries in Australia and elsewhere has been significant, resulting in the closure of traditional arts venues such as theatres, galleries and museums, along with the cancellation of large and small festivals, biennales and events—all of these spaces and activities proving difficult to successfully shift online (Commonwealth of Australia, 2021; Eltham & Pennington, 2021). As UNESCO reported in response to the impacts of the pandemic: ‘COVID-19 has exposed pre-existing vulnerabilities within the culture sector. Owing to its heavy reliance on venues and shared experiences, the sector has been among the hardest hit by COVID-19’ (UNESCO, 2021b).

Alongside this impact on the creative industries, young people have also been disproportionately affected by the pandemic. While some young people have responded to uncertainty by staying in education to effectively ‘shelter’ from the precarious job market (Witteveen, 2021), those facing barriers to education (in particular young people with experiences of mental health vulnerabilities and learning difficulties, insecure housing and/or language barriers) have been doubly impacted: unable to find work while disengaged from mainstream education and training (OECD, 2021). The numbers of young people in this predicament are surprising and concerning. Responding in part to the impacts of COVID-19, the United Nations reports:

In 2019, more than one in five of the world’s young people were not in employment, education or training, a proportion almost unchanged since 2005. Quarterly figures indicate that the rate increased from the fourth quarter of 2019 to the second quarter of 2020 in 42 out of 49 countries and territories with data. (O’Higgins, 2020)

Fig. 1.1 A still from Emerging (2020), a video made by students of Youthworx, a media production social enterprise based in Melbourne (Image courtesy of the artists and Youthworx)

Meanwhile, youth unemployment rose in nearly all OECD countries in 2020–2021 (OECD, 2021).

It is in this context that ASEs offer the potential to support young people impacted by global economic conditions and crises, especially in terms of re-engaging them with education and providing pathways to employment (Fig. 1.1). This potential applies to both young people generally and those experiencing socio-economic disadvantage more specifically. This is to caution against reducing the activity of ASEs to addressing marginality alone and to insist that the term ‘marginalisation’ can itself be ambiguous, offensive and even damaging in its use. As we will discuss in further detail later in this chapter, we resist the tendency to associate structural marginalisation with individual identities—which often leads to deficit constructions. Instead, we privilege the skills, talents, interests and voices of young artists engaged in ASEs and understand that they are not in themselves marginal—but are impacted by forces of marginalisation. This humanising methodological strategy responds to Eve Tuck’s (2009) call to arms for researchers to move away