

PALGRAVE STUDIES IN JOURNALISM AND THE GLOBAL SOUTH

Women Journalists in South Africa

Democracy in the Age of Social Media

Edited by Glenda Daniels · Kate Skinner

palgrave
macmillan

Palgrave Studies in Journalism and the Global South

Series Editors

Bruce Mutsvairo
Auburn University
Auburn, AL, USA

Saba Bebawi

University of Technology Sydney
Ultimo, NSW, Australia

Eddy Borges-Rey

Northwestern University Qatar
Ar-Rayyan, Qatar

This series focuses on cutting-edge developments in journalism in and from the Global South and illuminates how journalism cultures and practices have evolved from the era of colonization to contemporary globalization. Bringing previously underrepresented research from the Global South to the English speaking world, this series will focus on a broad range of topics within journalism including pedagogy, ethics, history of journalism, press freedom, theory, propaganda, gender, cross-border collaboration and methodological issues. Despite the geographical connotations of the term ‘Global South’ the series will not be defined by geographical boundaries, as Western countries are home to millions of immigrants and the contributions of immigrant journalists will be covered.

Glenda Daniels • Kate Skinner
Editors

Women Journalists in South Africa

Democracy in the Age of Social Media

palgrave
macmillan

Editors

Glenda Daniels
Department of Media Studies
University of the Witwatersrand
Johannesburg, South Africa

Kate Skinner
Independent Researcher
Johannesburg, South Africa

ISSN 2662-480X ISSN 2662-4818 (electronic)
Palgrave Studies in Journalism and the Global South
ISBN 978-3-031-12695-6 ISBN 978-3-031-12696-3 (eBook)
<https://doi.org/10.1007/978-3-031-12696-3>

© Springer Nature Switzerland AG 2022

This work is subject to copyright. All rights are solely and exclusively licensed by the Publisher, whether the whole or part of the material is concerned, specifically the rights of translation, reprinting, reuse of illustrations, recitation, broadcasting, reproduction on microfilms or in any other physical way, and transmission or information storage and retrieval, electronic adaptation, computer software, or by similar or dissimilar methodology now known or hereafter developed.

The use of general descriptive names, registered names, trademarks, service marks, etc. in this publication does not imply, even in the absence of a specific statement, that such names are exempt from the relevant protective laws and regulations and therefore free for general use. The publisher, the authors, and the editors are safe to assume that the advice and information in this book are believed to be true and accurate at the date of publication. Neither the publisher nor the authors or the editors give a warranty, expressed or implied, with respect to the material contained herein or for any errors or omissions that may have been made. The publisher remains neutral with regard to jurisdictional claims in published maps and institutional affiliations.

Cover illustration: Patrick de Grijns / Alamy Stock Photo

This Palgrave Macmillan imprint is published by the registered company Springer Nature Switzerland AG.

The registered company address is: Gewerbestrasse 11, 6330 Cham, Switzerland

This book is dedicated to all women journalists around the world, and in particular the ones who suffer online violence, or cyberbullying.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

We would like to thank Palgrave Macmillan for its enthusiasm and interest in this topic of research. The three reviewers made such positive and useful comments, all of which we followed through on. Thanks very much also to Vanessa Malila from Best Edit who checked all the references and edited along with us.

Thank you very much to all the contributing authors who wrote on the subject from all the different angles from intersectionality of race, class and gender, decoloniality, sexism in the newsroom, personal experience, community media and marginalisation, the gender pay gap and voices inequality in the media.

Most importantly, we would like to thank the journalists who were interviewed in this book.

CONTENTS

1	Introduction	1
	Glenda Daniels and Kate Skinner
2	The Triple Oppressions: Race, Class and Gender in South African Journalism	15
	Ylva Rodny-Gumede
3	Reporting Sexual and Gender-Based Violence: A Decolonial Gaze on Women Journalists in South Africa	31
	Sarah Chiumbu
4	Glass Ceilings: Cybermisogyny is a Sign of Unchecked Sexism in Media and Newsrooms	49
	Glenda Daniels
5	The Hounding	65
	Ferial Haffajee
6	Threats to Rape and Kill Me	77
	Qaanitah Hunter
7	Building Media Credibility and Ethics in South Africa: A Way Forward from the Margins	89
	Kate Skinner

8	The Gender Pay Gap in the South African Media Sector	107
	Julie Reid
9	The Marginalisation of Women's Voices in News Stories: Thoughts on a Way Forward	127
	Nomshado Lubisi-Nkosinkulu, Lister Namumba, and Thandi Smith
10	Reflections: Re-imagining Journalism for a Feminist Future	143
	Glenda Daniels and Kate Skinner
	Index	157

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Sarah Chiumbu is an associate professor in the School of Communications at the University of Johannesburg (UJ), South Africa. Before joining UJ she was a Senior Research Specialist at the Human Sciences Research Council (HSRC). She is the author of the book Radio, Public life and Citizen Deliberation in South Africa, among others.

Glenda Daniels is an associate professor in the Media Studies Department at the University of the Witwatersrand, in Johannesburg. She has a PhD in Political Science, has been a journalist for over two decades, and serves on the councils of the South African National Editors' Forum (Sanef) and the Press Council of South Africa. Daniels is a Daily Maverick, Media Matters columnist. Her latest book is Power and Loss in South African Journalism: News in the Age of Social Media.

Ferial Haffajee is an associate editor at Daily Maverick. A journalist/ editor of more than 30 years, she has been the editor of the Mail & Guardian, City Press and Huffington Post SA. Haffajee was awarded the 2014 International Press Freedom Award by the Committee to Protect Journalists. She is the author of the book: What If There Were No Whites in South Africa?

Qaanitah Hunter is a South African journalist and politics and opinions editor at News24. She is the winner of the Nat Nakasa award in 2019 for bravery in journalism. She is the author and co-author of the books: Balance of Power: Ramaphosa and the Future of South Africa and Eight Days in July: Inside the Zuma Unrest that Set South Africa Alight.

Nomshado Lubisi-Nkosinkulu is the Communications Manager for the South African NGO, Media Monitoring Africa (MMA). She has a degree in Communications Science and is furthering her postgraduate studies at the University of South Africa.

Lister Rikhotso Namumba is the Projects Management Coordinator at Media Monitoring Africa with ten years of experience working on children's rights advocacy, research and communications. She writes a WordPress blog: A Zambian Girl.

Julie Reid is an associate professor in the Department of Communications Science at the University of South Africa (UNISA). She is the author of the book Media Diversity in South Africa: New Concepts from the Global South, among other books, and has served on the National Working Group of the Right2Know campaign for many years. She was also the president of the South African Communications' Association (Sacomm) from 2013 to 2015.

Ylva Rodny-Gumede is a professor in the University of Johannesburg's Department of Journalism, Film and Television. From 2019 she has been head of UJ's Head of Internationalisation. She is a former president of the South African Communications Association (Sacomm). Rodny-Gumede is the co-editor of the book Decolonising Journalism Education in South Africa, Critical Perspectives.

Kate Skinner has been a media freedom activist, researcher and policy analyst for the last 25 years. She has worked in the unions, NGOs, government and the media industry. She was the coordinator of Support Public Broadcasting Coalition (SOS) for many years. In 2017 she completed her PhD at Wits University on public service broadcasting. She is the author of "How Covid-19 shocked the media industry" published in the 2020 volume of State of the Newsroom.

Thandi Smith is head of programmes for Media Monitoring Africa. She has a Master's in Media Studies from Wits University. Her research and activism focus includes media freedom, digital rights, internet governance and freedom of expression. She is the co-author of Weekly Trends Reports on Disinformation in South Africa.

ABBREVIATIONS

AIP	Association of Independent Publishers
AME	African Media Entertainment
CGE	Commission for Gender Equality
GMMP	Global Media Monitoring Project
IFJ	International Federation of Journalists
IWMF	International Women's Media Foundation
MDDA	Media Development and Diversity Agency
MMA	Media Monitoring Africa
NICD	National Institute for Communicable Diseases
PCSA	Press Council of South Africa
SABC	South African Broadcasting Corporation
SAHRC	South African Human Rights Commission
SANEF	South African National Editors' Forum
SAPS	South African Police Service
SARS	South African Revenue Service
UN	United Nations
UNDP	United Nations Development Programme
UNESCO	United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation

LIST OF TABLES

Table 8.1	The SABC's employment figures of men and women at varying post levels for the years 2018, 2019 and 2020 (SABC, 2018, p. 109, 2019, p. 85, 2020, p. 81)	119
Table 8.2	The eMedia Holdings employment figures of men and women at varying post levels for the years 2019, 2020 and 2021 (eMedia Holdings 2019, p. 43, 2020, p. 38, 2021, p. 41)	120
Table 8.3	The AME employment figures of men and women at varying post levels for the years 2020 and 2021 (African Media Entertainment Limited 2020, p. 11, 2021, p. 10)	120

CHAPTER 1

Introduction

Glenda Daniels and Kate Skinner

Women journalists in South Africa crack major investigative, corruption-busting stories and exercise their freedom of expression on social media. Their contributions, therefore, to deepening democracy is significant and shows evidence of how they exercise power. However, there is also a misogynistic power pressing down upon them on social media, when they are trolled. The country's women journalists are vilified and threatened online, referred to as “cybermisogyny”, which is the online hatred and bullying of women (Daniels, 2020). South Africa is by no means alone in this growing trend which is now becoming an international scourge as indicated in the article “The Chilling: the biggest issue in world press freedom is attacks against women journalists” (Daniels, 2021).

The international context is that nearly three quarters, or 73%, of more than 900 women journalists surveyed from 125 countries in a 2021

G. Daniels (✉)

University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, South Africa

e-mail: Glenda.Daniels@wits.ac.za

K. Skinner

Independent Publishing, Johannesburg, South Africa

e-mail: kate.skinner@mweb.co.za

© The Author(s), under exclusive license to Springer Nature
Switzerland AG 2022

G. Daniels, K. Skinner (eds.), Women Journalists in South Africa,
Palgrave Studies in Journalism and the Global South,
https://doi.org/10.1007/978-3-031-12696-3_1

UNESCO international study reported that they had experienced online bullying. This abuse consists of interpellation (hailing, shaming, naming), for example, being called “bitch”, “slut”, “whore”, “presstitute” (meaning a press plus prostitute), “ugly”, as well as body shaming or slandered as “fat”. The research delineates these abuses and other discriminations such as the gender pay gap, and includes ideas on how to provide an environment that is safer, freer and more equal for women in journalism. The book is an edited collection of chapters on, and written by, women journalists in the South African democracy space and the obstacles they experience through vilification, mainly on social media. These attacks are now bound up with disinformation, intersectional discrimination and populist politics.

Women journalist voices exercise power and add a vital dimension to diversity. However, they are harassed, and there are attempts to silence and marginalise them in the online social media space of the big tech companies such as Twitter and Facebook by populist, corrupt politicians and their supporters who are often from troll factories. Emerging from the research is that women journalists appear to be the biggest target in the digital age of social media and misinformation. This book looks at how women journalists in South Africa exercise their power and how attempts to curb their power are exercised—the anti-feminist backlash.

South Africa is chosen as a case study deliberately and purposively for a few reasons: First, the Constitution of South Africa protects gender equality and freedom of expression, so women are not fighting against the all-powerful body of laws in the country. Second, South Africa has a rich civil society culture of commitment to human rights and resistance to abuse, therefore, making it an ideal zone to explore ideas on how to tackle the scourge. Indeed, there are over 20 civil society media organisations¹ in just one space, and there are many unions² in the media space too, yet this scourge continues. Third, exploring one country affords the editors and chapter researchers and writers an opportunity for an in-depth or deeper study, rather than a superficial, around the world gloss over. Fourth, the editors and researchers are geographically located in South Africa and have access to women journalists to interview them, which was done online due to the Covid-19 era.

¹For example, the South African National Editors Forum (Sanef); Institute for the Advancement of Journalism (IAJ); Press Council of SA; South African Communications Association (SACOMM); Media Development and Diversity Agency (MDDA); Freedom of Expression Institute (FXI); Save our SABC (SOS); Media Monitoring Africa (MMA); Media Institute of Southern Africa (MISA); Association for Independent Publishers (AIP); Broadcast Complaints Commission of SA (BCCSA); Pen South Africa (PENSA); National Press Club; SA Freelance Association (SAFREA); Right2Know; National Association of Broadcasters; and Amabhungane.

According to the book Glass Ceilings: Women in South African Media Houses (Daniels & Nyamweda, 2018), women editors, senior journalists, “influencers” and news sources continue to be under-represented. The attempted closures on and suppression of women’s freedom of expression has serious consequences for the role they play in democracy. This role could be lost unless there are ways to stop cybermisogyny. Cybermisogyny intersects with impactful stories concerning women exposing state and private sector corruption. This book argues and advocates that the voices of women editors, senior journalists, influencers and sources—the shapers of the news agenda—must all be protected and, indeed, bolstered in the digital age.

Through this research, brainstorming and workshopping of ideas to ensure the diversity of women’s voice is not lost, women media academics (together with contributions from industry and civil society) could spread awareness to help break the cycle of growing anti-feminist backlash. This book is an edited collection of academic chapters with an advocacy element, written mainly by women academic media scholars. It covers the highlighted issues from a Global South, African feminist gaze.

This introduction delineates the theory and methods used in the book, as well as the media landscape, legally and politically. It sets the scene, so to speak, for the chapters to follow. The sequence of chapters follows the logics of the political landscape on where gender fits in historical apartheid’s oppression, where women were always at the bottom of the pile of hierarchies. Hence, we start with the triple oppression and trace the history of women in this structure.

² For example, Media Workers’ Association of South Africa (MWASA); the Communications Workers Union (CWU); and the Broadcasting, Electronic, Media and Allied Workers Union (BEMAWU).