About this book: The atrocious killings in Ukraine are among the things that are usually said to leave us "speechless". On the other hand, the monstrous nature of the crimes committed there requires that we do not remain silent about them. So these literary miniatures are an attempt to speak about the unspeakable in spite of everything.

About the author: Zacharias Mbizo, engaged in literature since 2015, belongs to the circle of the so-called "Ecartists" around the blogger Rother Baron and has already left numerous traces on Planet Literature.

The Ten Commandments in War

1. I am your Lord, the God of War. You shall carry out my every command unconditionally.
2. You shall kill, slaughter and murder. The more indiscriminate and uncompromising your killing, the more worshipful your deeds.
3. You shall honour your Fatherland and Mother Homeland. You can do this by expanding your Fatherland and offering human sacrifices to Mother Homeland.
4. You shall not allow yourself hours of leisure. Every day on which you serve your Lord, the God of War, is a holiday for you.
5. You shall spread as many lies as possible about your neighbour. The darker his image, the greater the willingness to destroy him.
6. You shall seize your neighbour's goods and chattels. He does not deserve any property.
7. You shall steal whatever your heart desires. Every piece of plunder is a jewel on the altar of your Lord.
8. You shall rape your neighbour's mother, daughter and grandmother. Sow the seed of your Lord in them, so that they may bear the brand of his rule in them forever.
9. You shall not feel any reverence - not even for me, your Lord. Curse your God whenever you feel like it - your fury will make you all the more impactful a servant.
