

Liza Wing Man Kam

Reconfiguration of 'the Stars and the Queen'

A Quest for the Interrelationship between Architecture
and Civic Awareness in Post-colonial Hong Kong

Nomos

Liza Wing Man Kam

Reconfiguration of 'the Stars and the Queen'

A Quest for the Interrelationship between Architecture
and Civic Awareness in Post-colonial Hong Kong

Nomos

Printed with support of the German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD).

Cover photo: Photo of the annihilated: The post-colonial government's intention to remove the colonial structure has drawn attention of the initially ignorant public to start reflecting on Hong Kong's past, present and the future through looking at these structures. Special gratitude to the independent photographer, Mr Tse Pak Chai.

Die Deutsche Nationalbibliothek lists this publication in the Deutsche Nationalbibliografie; detailed bibliographic data is available in the Internet at <http://dnb.d-nb.de>

Zugl.: Weimar, Bauhaus Univ., Diss., 2014

ISBN 978-3-8487-1083-6 (Print)
978-3-8452-5191-2 (ePDF)

British Library Cataloguing-in-Publication Data

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library.

ISBN 978-3-8487-1083-6 (Print)
978-3-8452-5191-2 (ePDF)

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Kam, Liza Wing Man

Reconfiguration of 'the Stars and the Queen'

A Quest for the Interrelationship between Architecture and Civic Awareness in Post-colonial Hong Kong

Liza Wing Man Kam

190 p.

Includes bibliographic references.

ISBN 978-3-8487-1083-6 (Print)
978-3-8452-5191-2 (ePDF)

1. Edition 2015

© Nomos Verlagsgesellschaft, Baden-Baden, Germany 2015. Printed and bound in Germany.

This work is subject to copyright. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or any information storage or retrieval system, without prior permission in writing from the publishers. Under § 54 of the German Copyright Law where copies are made for other than private use a fee is payable to "Verwertungsgesellschaft Wort", Munich.

No responsibility for loss caused to any individual or organization acting on or refraining from action as a result of the material in this publication can be accepted by Nomos or the author.

*To Kam Tin Po, Wong Wai Ha
and
Kam Wing Sze Elizabeth*

*Special thanks to Prof. Dr. Habil. Frank Eckardt
and
Prof. Dr. Subrata Mitra, who have been extremely inspiring*

The route has not been short, nor has it been painless. From the 2006's Star Ferry Pier and Queen's Pier movement, to the Anti-Expressed Railway Campaign defending the Choi Yuen Village in 2010, followed by the 2012's Anti-National Education Campaign, recently it was the Umbrella Movement in 2014. The Hong Kongers' quests shifted from being the interests for particular groups to a broader discussion on the way to a better society for everybody. For some of these Hong Kongers, 'civic awareness' has evolved itself into pursue of an ultimate ideology. This ideology, departing from but simultaneously echoing with the movement's objective, is woven into, and displayed, with the most fundamental elements of expression in the movements and the actions per se. The evolution process of the ideology involves a perpetual and profound reflection of individual's right and responsibility in society, proven by the Umbrella Movement. Yet, the process and the lesson for self-recognition and reflection have started far earlier than one could remember, or, imagine.

On the 19th Day of the Yellow Umbrella Movement in Hong Kong

Preface

This book examines how colonial space and architecture, and their treatment in a post-colonial setting in Hong Kong, transform, in parallel with the city dwellers' civic awareness. Three examples of colonial architecture, namely Star Ferry Pier, Queen's Pier and the former Hong Kong Legislative Council (LEGCO) Building are investigated. The two piers and their surrounding public space, the Edinburgh Place, was the site where colonial governors disembarked from their Royal yacht before their inauguration ceremony arriving at the colony, as well it was the spot which hosted the first wave of social movement in Hong Kong in the 1970s under the colonial rule. The two piers were demolished in 2006-07 despite the public's rather vigorous opposition, while the Legislative Council was relocated from its place of birth, i.e., the colonial neo-classical building, to a newly built complex in 2011. The attempt and success of the post-colonial authority to remove or transform the colonial space and architecture, as well as the public who were not motivated enough to take actions (and the weakness of the actions per se if there were any) when their site of memory is subjected to annihilation, is seen, in fact, as driven by the perpetual colonial legacy in different forms.

This book is therefore composed of three main layers of investigation. Firstly, it analyses how history education in the colonial Hong Kong had effectively cultivated an aloof population towards local history and civic affairs, with meticulously engineered, scheming and plotting pedagogical ideals that in its essence facilitated ruling and control. While history is never completed and memory can be sanctified over time, the concept of 'Les lieux de mémoire'¹ is verified with (and could have been relevant to) the two piers which narratives of the city had been continually woven into. The two removed piers are therefore, lost opportunities for the post-colonial population to learn about their civic rights and the possibilities from the past experiences with the 'lieu de mémoire' which has ceased to exist. The transformation and disappearance process of these three examined structures in the post-colonial Hong Kong became the interest of the second investigation. It aims at identifying the lost or realised opportunities for true public participation in the decision-making process during the transition of these examined heritage, and to consider the subtle increase in civic awareness that results from the transition process.

1 Pierre Nora, The Realms of Memory, 1997

Considering the conflicts between the authority and the public regarding the demolition of the two piers, the third and main investigation of this book is therefore to decipher the multiple, interwoven but contradictory narratives of these piers. The denotations or connotations of the piers were either unknown and/or unclear to most of the Hong Kong natives, due to the nature of history education during the colonial era. These different denotations and connotations perceived by the colonial and post-colonial authority, the elder generation of citizens and younger members of the public from their various perspectives are interpreted, departing from the spatial theory of Lefebvre. This is enabled by observations, archival reviews and a series of narrative interviews with five elderly people and three young demonstrators who, in different levels, participated in the anti-demolition actions in the two piers incidents. The comparison of the narratives of the two aforementioned piers between the two age groups is aimed at visualising how far the memories associated with space and architecture could actually motivate citizens to take actions when their places with associated memory are to vanish. The changes in the aloofness of certain social groups, the increase in civic awareness and simultaneously the hindrance to the rise of this awareness are discussed. This hindrance is argued to be a lingering effect from the colonial mode of both history education and the government executives' accustomed obstinacy to the public's wishes.

Through understanding the texture of the phantom colonial legacy, it leads to a scrutiny of the entangled interrelation between history, historiography, identity (as citizens of the late/ post-/ new colonial city), architecture and public space, and civic awareness, based on empirical and theoretical studies.

Keywords: colonial space and architecture, post-colonial Hong Kong, colonial legacy, civic awareness, public participation, 'lieux de mémoire'², the production of space³, narratives

2 Pierre Nora, The Realms of Memory, 1997

3 Henri Lefebvre, The Production of Space, 1974, 1991

Table of Contents

What this book is not	21
I Some terms and definitions	23
Post-colonial Hong Kong and colonial legacy	23
The broader field of post-colonial studies: geographical and temporal specification	23
Temporal specification	24
From a British territory to a Chinese territory- what about Hong Kong?	26
Aspects of focus	27
Colonial space and architecture as ‘site of enunciation’	28
‘Lieux de mémoire’	29
Public Participation	30
The Production of Space: three different spatial codes	31
Narratives	32
II Hypotheses	34
III Main Research Questions	34
IV Research Design, strategy and methodology	35
V State-of-the-art and relevance	37
VI Structure of the work – Chapter overview	39
Introduction	41
Prologue	41
Background	41
Obscurity along the timeline – the ‘proclaimed’ Hong Kong History	42
The pier complex as ‘lieux de mémoire’	44

Table of Contents

Public participation in Hong Kong: a novelty, a token, and a dream	45
The Production of space: the different spatial codes embedded in the same pier complex	47
Your (my) memory versus my (your) interpretation to the space	50
Colonial legacy on public and post-colonial officials – the steady but ponderous public and the lethargic authority	52
Colonial legacy: hindrance on the way to ‘decolonisation’	54
Chapter 1 Obscurities along the timeline	55
1.1 History versus Memory- the colonisers’ history and the colonised populace’s memory	55
1.2 ‘History’- political indoctrination to the Hong Kongers- colonial narration Vs Chinese Nationalism	58
1.2.1 The Ultimate Encouragement to Aloofness	59
1.3 The multi- faceted perspectives on connotations of colonial heritage	61
1.3.1 Colonial heritage- Is the concept equivalent to a celebration of colonialism?	61
1.3.2 ‘The core value’ did not come out of nothing	63
1.4 Obscurities along the timeline	64
1.5 Whose history?	67
1.5.1 English language as a ‘tool’, not a medium of contemplation	68
1.5.2 Not British, not Chinese- a colony	69
1.6 The eradicated civic history	70
1.6.1 Come forward and say ‘No’	71
1.6.2 Chinese language ‘as worthless as mud on the ground’	73
1.6.3 Pinnacle Island- ‘Defending Diayutai’	73
1.7 The eternally lost opportunity to learn from the past	74
1.7.1 Queen’s Pier as backdrop- The shift in focus of social movements before and after 1970 s	74

1.7.2 Removal of the backdrop	75
1.8 Could that really be a ‘definitive disenchantment’?	75
Chapter 2 Inception Point- a belated awakening	78
2.1 A lesson should have been learned from ‘an overturned car ahead’	78
2.2 Tamar as a buried bomb- Why Tamar? Why...?	79
2.3 Tamar Government Headquarters- from concept to realisation	82
2.3.1 A new government- A new headquarters?	82
Do we really need a new headquarters?	82
What does the public really think?	84
How much do we know?	86
Planning procedures in Hong Kong	87
2.3.2 The Sites- Tamar and the Government’s Hill: ‘HMS Tamar’	88
2.3.3 LEGCO building- wicked symbol of colonialism?	91
2.4 Public participation- where indeed are the 'world-class Hong Kongers'?	95
2.4.1 Along the ‘Participation ladder’: ‘Citizen Participation is citizen power’	97
2.5 Conclusion	102
Chapter 3 Yet it is too late again- The piers memories	104
3.1 From the Tamar silence to the bustling piers	104
3.2 The perceived site for power display – the conceived ceremonial backdrop – the lived social action space	105
3.3 Metamorphosing ‘spatial practice’ and the expanding ‘representational space’	109
3.4 The plugged ears of the Hong Kong Government	110
3.4.1 Star Ferry Pier Clock Tower (15.12.1957- 12.12.2006)	110
3.4.2 The empowered: ‘Sorry, it’s too late’	111
3.4.3 Public’s actions- ‘we have tried our best’	113

Table of Contents

3.4.4 'Our Pier'- Queen's Pier (1953-2007)	116
3.5 Conceptualisation of the two Piers- representations of space (Pg. 43, Lefebvre, 1974) and its irritations to the 'post-colonial' empowered	119
3.5.1 Star Ferry Pier and the Clock Tower	119
3.5.2 'For whom the bell tolls'- memories with the Clock Tower	121
3.5.3 'God (couldn't) Save the Queen?!'	122
3.6 Conclusion	123
Chapter 4 What is it if it was not about memories?	127
4.1 The struggle between sense of righteousness and powerlessness- the cases from the elder age group	129
4.1.1 'I am not the radical type'	135
4.2 Chow: 'the two piers are, to me, almost purely political'	138
4.2.1 Transforming the sense of 'powerlessness' to actual actions	142
4.2.2 No dismissal possible	143
4.2.3 Moving the base camp from Star Ferry Pier to Queen's Pier- innovative actions 'for' and 'in' the space	144
4.3 Colonial legacy- from interpretation to the space to behavior in the space	146
4.4 Conclusion- It's not about memory	148
Chapter 5 Following the Stars and the Queen – the steady, ponderous public and the lethargic empowered	151
5.1 The emergence of the young 'radical' activists- what the Stars and the Queen are 'swapped for'	151
5.1.1 Cheng: From the sense of powerlessness to 'getting involved'- standing next to the minorities	153
Sense of Powerlessness	154
Turning point: everyone's conscience to '8964	155
'Ascetic parade' in the public's eyes	159

Discussion shifted- from 'fear' to 'values'	160
5.1.2 So: Reflection on direct actions – jumping from being an ‘enthusiastic spectator’ to ‘walking, kneeling and requesting a fair treatment to the suppressed group’	161
‘Fighting for the right of being the public space users’	162
Planning as ‘the professional’s business’ in the past – the emergence of the ‘participatory planning’ concept	164
Broadening the realm of knowledge and arousing the public's interest to discussions on urban development	165
5.2 Statistics on the trend: going on the street and speaking up for oneself	166
5.3 ‘Development as the absolute principle’ – eradication of pluralism – the catalyst for the society to react	167
5.4 Fighting against the intangible violence: ‘the table is tilted – we stand up for the minorities only to achieve a ‘comparatively fairer state’	168
5.5 The lethargic empowered	169
5.5.1 ‘Tracking the trace of the old ruts’ and play safe ‘Policies do not emerge all of a sudden through ‘eruption from a piece of rock’”	171
5.6 Colonial legacy – the ultimate hindrance to develop the contributive tension between the authority and the public for contributive discussions	176
Chapter 6 Colonial legacy – hindrance on the way to ‘decolonisation’	178
6.1 Colonial legacy: history education – colonised populace ‘dare to be angry but dare not to express’	178
6.2 Colonial legacy: manipulation of the notion of ‘participation’	180
6.3 Colonial legacy: Imposition of spatial code: the ultimate dominant ‘spatial practice’ and the recessive ‘representational space’	180

Table of Contents

6.4 Colonial legacy(s) interplay: demonstrating the power of both the colonisers and the people – deciphering the colonial spatial code of the piers	181
6.5 Colonial legacy: the ponderous public and the post-colonial government- ‘tracking the trace of the old ruts’ and play safe	182
6.6 Final words: Colonial legacy as an ultimate hindrance to decolonisation	183
Bibliography	187

List of Figures

Fig.1.1 a	(above) spatial relationship: City Hall, Edinburgh Place and Queen's Pier before 2007.	65
Fig.1.1 b	(below) The three spaces in photo	65
Fig.1.2	Original location of the two piers (dotted lines). The light grey shaded P2 Highway is built as proposed.	66
Fig. 2.1	The former LEGCO building 'engulfed' by demonstrators in June 1989 against Beijing Government's massacre to the demonstrating students in Beijing in Tiananmen Square.	95
Fig. 3.1	Ceremonies in Edinburgh Place during the 1960 s	106
Fig. 5.1	the ascetic parade of the young people to urge for a stop to the Express Rail construction.	159
Fig. 5.2	Banners and demonstrators: the old Legislative Council building as the backdrop.	159
Fig. 5.3	Diagram showing the rough locations of the two piers. It is obvious that the public spaces are totally destroyed.	163

